Overview

In our 210th episode of The Cyberlaw Podcast, Stewart Baker, Maury Shenk, Ben Wittes, and Nick Weaver discuss:

- The encryption debate heats up.
  - The FBI revives push for solution.
  - “FBI doesn’t understand math” argument hits roadblock: hard to say Ray Ozzie doesn’t.
  - Left/liberals piles on the Inspector General’s (IG) report suggesting maybe FBI didn’t want to use national security tools in a criminal case.
- Good week for attribution and retribution.
  - Carbanak mastermind busted in Spain?
  - Nikulin extradited to US.
- The US to require social media usernames, email addresses, and phone numbers from visa applicants.
- Julian Assange loses internet connection, Matt Green displays his cruel streak.
- Update on Keeper libel suit, if we can confirm case was dropped.
